Or `div[@class="fa-lg"]` The latter would only select any elements which are children of elements with the class `fa-lg` (and not inside other elements). There is no doubt that regular expressions can do this job as well, but I wouldn't recommend to use them because of the well known issues with Regex. Q: Angular `element.html()` won't show the HTML content of the element This is my code for a button in my HTML page. The button is bind to a function called `showRaw()` so that when I click on the button it shows the string inside of the `*ngFor`. However, it does not show the HTML content of the button. I tried to change `ngFor` for `` in and it didn't work. Any idea why? Show Raw Thank you! A: I believe this is because it is getting evaluated in the context of the whole component. You may try moving that into the `@ViewChild` decorator and extracting the variable out. `export class MyComponent { @ViewChild('showRaw') showRaw; showRaw(): string { return 'some string'; } }` President Trump Donald John Trump Federal prosecutor speaks out, says Barr 'has brought shame' on Justice Dept.
